

Fox aims to boost military ties with France

A Conservative government would seek to boost Britain's military relations with France, Liam Fox, the shadow defence secretary, said yesterday, stating that he wanted to see "a renewed and energised Anglo-French synergy" in future years.

Financial Times

MoD's vanguard: a mix of robot bomb defusers and kneepad goo

A robotic hand that could defuse bombs remotely, a camera with the ability to detect minute changes in the landscape and a mysterious orange goo that absorbs the impact of bomb blasts are among new battlefield technologies unveiled by the Ministry of Defence.

The Guardian

Nuclear order not enough to spare 300 BAE jobs

Britain's investment in a multibillion-pound nuclear submarine programme has not been enough to save cuts of 5 per cent in the 4,500-strong workforce at BAE Systems' naval base in Barrow-in-Furness in Cumbria. And the retirement of the old Nimrod surveillance aircraft took the number of redundancies in one day at the arms group to nearly 300.

The Times

Boeing to bid for $31 billion defence orders

Boeing expects to bid for $31 billion (around Rs1.4 trillion) worth of military contracts in India over 10 years as the South Asian nation upgrades its armed forces. The company plans to compete for contracts on fighter jets, maritime patrol aircraft, helicopters and military transport planes, Dinesh Keskar, president of Boeing's India unit, said in New Delhi on Thursday, reiterating an earlier forecast.

livemint.com

France Expects Longer Procurement Delays

Despite a year of government exhortations, the French defence industry is likely to see average delivery times slip further in 2010, said Laurent Collet-Billon, the head of the Direction Générale pour l'Armement (DGA) procurement office.

Defense News

Anti-arms group urges SFO rethink on BAE deal

Anti-arms campaigners have asked the Serious Fraud Office (SFO) to reconsider a landmark deal to settle bribery allegations against BAE Systems, the defence group.

The Times